Mediation and Arbitration:

Experience shows that it is often better to try to resolve disputes out of court. To that end, McCabe & Mack offers services involving mediation and arbitration.

In the mediation process, the mediator brings the parties together to settle their differences without resorting to litigation. This device, often successful, saves parties the time and expenses associated with litigation in the courts.

In arbitration, the parties chose an arbitrator who hears the case and makes a ruling. The process is similar to litigation, but is more informal and can be considerably less expensive.

As a former County Court Judge, State Supreme Court Justice, and until 2007, a member of New York's highest court, the Court of Appeals, he has vast experience in presiding over trials, appeals, and settlements.
