Anna Skotko is Deputy Chief of Appeals and Acting Deputy Chief of the Criminal Division of the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of New York. In these roles, Ms. Skotko supervises prosecutors across the entire Criminal Division, advising on a wide range of federal investigations, prosecutions, and judicial proceedings before the district court and court of appeals. During her more than ten years at the U.S. Attorney's Office, Ms. Skotko has represented the United States in prosecutions, from grand jury through trial and appeal, involving national security, public corruption, espionage, cybercrime, securities and wire fraud, FCPA violations, money laundering, international contraband trafficking, sanctions violations, and murder conspiracies. Ms. Skotko has argued on behalf of the Government in over a dozen cases before the Court of Appeals. Ms. Skotko is also an Adjunct Professor of Law at New York University Law School, where she teaches a seminar on federal criminal prosecution.
